Ben Kelly and Virgil Abloh Design a New Parisian Hot Spot

Virgil Abloh has tried his hand at interior design, with a little bit of help from Ben Kelly. The canvas for their collaborative project is Joséphine, a new culture club at Paris's Théâtre du Châtelet. Complete with graphically designed, low-lit walls, it's bound to be the city's latest design-forward hot spot.

Jean Prouvé's House Is Now at the Place de la Concorde

Heading to Paris? Then be sure to check out the reconstructed Jean Prouvé house, currently taking over the Place de la Concorde. Made possible by François Laffanour of the Downtown Gallery, the modernist structure is at wonderful odds with the grand epicenter of Parisian life. The house's pop-up design was created by Prouvé during the post-World War II era in order to help address the nation's housing shortage.

The New MoMA Abandons White Walls

With the new MoMA now off and running, design-savvy visitors may be wondering: What happened to the all-white walls? While there are still many white-cube spaces, the remodel and expansion is also brimming with colorful hues. Now, the exact Farrow & Ball paint shades used have been announced, with a mauve Sulking Room Pink, bright orange Charlotte's Locks, and minty green Cabbage White standing out.
